I snatched a pistol from a cot near the door in my office, and told him, if he interfered further with my property, I would shoot him. Upon this he desisted, and left the premises with some insulting language upon his tongue. No notice or summons was ever sent for me to appear before the judge; and the first intimation I had of any complaint against me, except by hearsay through the British vice-consul, was by the entrance of the soldiers on my premises to take me to prison. I addressed a note to the promoter fiscal, correcting his error that I had treated with contempt any order of the judge for my appearance in his court, to which the fiscal replied that he knew little further of the matter than what he had gathered from rumor. As...
