Doubtless a considerable proportion of the carbonic gas normally contained in the atmosphere is thus supplied from within the soil itself. Relation of Carbonic Gas to Bacterial and Fungous Activity.--It has been fully demonstrated by the researches of Koch, Miquel, Adametz, Fuelles, Wollny and others, that the formation of carbonic gas in the soil is not a purely chemical oxidation process, but is essentially dependent upon the presence and life-activity of numerous kinds of organisms, bacterial as well as fungous. The crucial proof of this fact is that the presence of any antiseptic diminishes, and if exceeding certain proportions completely suppresses, the formation of carbonic gas; while on the other hand all conditions known to be favorable to the life of such organisms, viz., the proper conditions of temperature and moisture (varying with different kinds), increase the formation of the gas. Such formation is of course, however, conditioned upon the presence of oxygen. In the case of most bacteria, there is a certain limit beyond which the presence of their own product exerts an injurious or repressive effect upon their activity; so that if the gas accumulates beyond that limit, the rate of its formation decreases despite of otherwise favorable conditions. It follows that the best life-conditions of these organisms (even when anerobic) cannot be fulfilled below...
